

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Alabama

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Alabama would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Alabama would receive $13.0 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,082 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Alabama would receive $5.5 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 195 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Alabama would receive $10.6 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 18,133 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.7 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 934 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.6 million less for Alabama, and 622 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.8 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,065 Alabama youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Alaska

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Alaska would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Alaska would receive $1.6 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 132 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Alaska would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Alaska would receive $1.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 1,639 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $900,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 500 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $408,000 less for Alaska, and 163 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $433,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 259 Alaska youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Arizona

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Arizona would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Arizona would receive $12.5 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,041 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Arizona would receive $7.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 246 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Arizona would receive $10.2 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 19,833 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.4 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 775 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.7 million less for Arizona, and 694 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $2.0 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,211 Arizona youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Arkansas

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Arkansas would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Arkansas would receive $7.8 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 651 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Arkansas would receive $4.2 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 147 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Arkansas would receive $6.6 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 10,915 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.6 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 898 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.1 million less for Arkansas, and 459 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.2 million from the President's request, denying training services to 692 Arkansas youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution California

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, California would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution California would receive $104.2 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 8,698 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, California would receive $66.5 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 2,344 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that California would receive $82.9 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 211,389 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $37.6 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 20,872 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $18.5 million less for California, and 7,390 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $19.1 million from the President's request, denying training services to 11,419 California youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Colorado

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Colorado would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Colorado would receive $8.3 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 695 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Colorado would receive $4.6 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 161 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Colorado would receive $5.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 4,827 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.0 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 538 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $685,000 less for Colorado, and 274 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $844,000 million from the President's request, denying training services to 505 Colorado youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Connecticut

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Connecticut would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Connecticut would receive $6.6 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 553 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Connecticut would receive $3.7 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 129 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Connecticut would receive $5.8 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 6,044 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.5 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 837 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $795,000 less for Connecticut, and 318 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.1 million from the President's request, denying training services to 663 Connecticut youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Delaware

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Delaware would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Delaware would receive $1.6 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 131 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Delaware would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Delaware would receive $1.6 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 973 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $257,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 143 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $279,000 less for Delaware, and 112 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $356,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 213 Delaware youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

District of Columbia

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, District of Columbia would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution District of Columbia would receive $3.1 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 258 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, District of Columbia would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that District of Columbia would receive $2.4 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 4,961 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.4 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 766 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $532,000 less for District of Columbia, and 213 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $515,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 308 District of Columbia youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Florida

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Florida would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Florida would receive $32.7 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 2,728 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Florida would receive $26.8 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 946 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Florida would receive $33.4 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 60,742 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $5.6 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 3,086 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $5.0 million less for Florida, and 1,992 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $4.8 million from the President's request, denying training services to 2,877 Florida youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Georgia

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Georgia would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Georgia would receive $20.8 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,736 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Georgia would receive $15.1 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 531 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Georgia would receive $18.4 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 26,049 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.6 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,431 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $2.3 million less for Georgia, and 921 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $2.4 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,450 Georgia youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Hawaii

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Hawaii would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Hawaii would receive $2.7 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 228 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Hawaii would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Hawaii would receive $1.8 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 3,933 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.4 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 760 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $659,000 less for Hawaii, and 264 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $621,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 372 Hawaii youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Idaho

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Idaho would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Idaho would receive $2.6 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 215 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Idaho would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Idaho would receive $1.9 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 2,798 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $764,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 425 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $486,000 less for Idaho, and 194 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $493,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 295 Idaho youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Illinois

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Illinois would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Illinois would receive $33.7 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 2,813 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Illinois would receive $14.2 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 501 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Illinois would receive $27.8 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 28,318 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $5.0 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 2,803 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $4.7 million less for Illinois, and 1,867 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $4.8 million from the President's request, denying training services to 2,859 Illinois youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Indiana

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Indiana would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Indiana would receive $11.9 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 996 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Indiana would receive $7.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 246 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Indiana would receive $9.3 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 7,796 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.5 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 826 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.2 million less for Indiana, and 475 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.6 million from the President's request, denying training services to 949 Indiana youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Iowa

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Iowa would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Iowa would receive $6.2 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 516 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Iowa would receive $3.3 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 118 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Iowa would receive $3.9 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 4,132 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $684,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 380 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $358,000 less for Iowa, and 143 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $469,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 281 Iowa youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Kansas

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Kansas would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Kansas would receive $5.8 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 485 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Kansas would receive $3.2 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 111 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Kansas would receive $4.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 5,607 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $759,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 422 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $391,000 less for Kansas, and 157 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $495,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 296 Kansas youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Kentucky

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Kentucky would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Kentucky would receive $13.3 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,114 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Kentucky would receive $5.1 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 181 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Kentucky would receive $10.6 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 19,268 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.5 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 832 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.9 million less for Kentucky, and 750 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $2.0 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,197 Kentucky youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Louisiana

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Louisiana would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Louisiana would receive $18.0 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,500 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Louisiana would receive $5.8 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 206 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Louisiana would receive $15.8 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 24,810 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $3.8 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 2,106 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $2.4 million less for Louisiana, and 962 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $2.6 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,542 Louisiana youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Maine

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Maine would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Maine would receive $3.2 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 265 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Maine would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Maine would receive $2.4 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 1,855 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $608,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 338 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $492,000 less for Maine, and 197 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $477,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 286 Maine youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution Maryland

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Maryland would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Maryland would receive $9.8 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 815 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Maryland would receive $5.9 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 207 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Maryland would receive $8.8 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 10,417 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.9 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,634 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.8 million less for Maryland, and 729 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.8 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,057 Maryland youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution Massachusetts

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Massachusetts would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Massachusetts would receive $13.8 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,150 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Massachusetts would receive $7.3 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 257 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Massachusetts would receive $11.7 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 13,541 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.0 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,112 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.3 million less for Massachusetts, and 530 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.9 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,116 Massachusetts youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Michigan

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Michigan would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Michigan would receive $30.0 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 2,502 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Michigan would receive $13.8 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 488 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Michigan would receive $27.3 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 20,165 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $3.2 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,764 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $3.0 million less for Michigan, and 1,213 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $3.5 million from the President's request, denying training services to 2,077 Michigan youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Minnesota

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Minnesota would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Minnesota would receive $9.1 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 758 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Minnesota would receive $5.2 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 184 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Minnesota would receive $6.6 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 8,430 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.3 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 701 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $866,000 less for Minnesota, and 347 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.2 million from the President's request, denying training services to 693 Minnesota youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Mississippi

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Mississippi would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Mississippi would receive $18.7 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,559 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Mississippi would receive $3.3 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 117 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Mississippi would receive $9.8 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 19,942 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.1 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,168 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.4 million less for Mississippi, and 574 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.5 million from the President's request, denying training services to 928 Mississippi youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Missouri

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Missouri would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Missouri would receive $14.1 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,175 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Missouri would receive $7.1 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 251 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Missouri would receive $10.9 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 13,571 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.1 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,144 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.8 million less for Missouri, and 733 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.8 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,087 Missouri youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Montana

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Montana would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Montana would receive $2.4 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 201 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Montana would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Montana would receive $2.1 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 2,455 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $725,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 403 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $433,000 less for Montana, and 173 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $416,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 249 Montana youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Nebraska

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Nebraska would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Nebraska would receive $4.0 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 335 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Nebraska would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Nebraska would receive $2.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 2,683 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $296,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 165 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $279,000 less for Nebraska, and 112 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $356,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 213 Nebraska youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Nevada

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Nevada would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Nevada would receive $2.4 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 201 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Nevada would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Nevada would receive $2.1 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 2,609 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $591,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 323 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $414,000 less for Nevada, and 166 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $527,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 315 Nevada youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution New Hampshire

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, New Hampshire would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution New Hampshire would receive $1.6 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 137 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, New Hampshire would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that New Hampshire would receive $1.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 1,103 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $235,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 131 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $279,000 less for New Hampshire, and 112 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $356,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 213 New Hampshire youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

New Jersey

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, New Jersey would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution New Jersey would receive $16.4 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,368 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, New Jersey would receive $9.9 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 349 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that New Jersey would receive $13.9 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 13,240 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $5.4 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 2,998 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $2.8 million less for New Jersey, and 1,129 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $3.4 million from the President's request, denying training services to 2,041 New Jersey youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

New Mexico

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, New Mexico would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution New Mexico would receive $6.5 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 545 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, New Mexico would receive $4.4 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 154 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that New Mexico would receive $5.9 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 6,781 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.1 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,193 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.1 million less for New Mexico, and 434 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.2 million from the President's request, denying training services to 724 New Mexico youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

New York

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, New York would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution New York would receive $55.5 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 4,630 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, New York would receive $50.5 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 1,778 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that New York would receive $66.7 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 66,734 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $21.0 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 11,683 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $10.6 million less for New York, and 4,226 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $10.0 million from the President's request, denying training services to 6,009 New York youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

North Carolina

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, North Carolina would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution North Carolina would receive $17.0 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,419 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, North Carolina would receive $9.5 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 334 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that North Carolina would receive $12.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 21,703 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.1 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,185 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.8 million less for North Carolina, and 712 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.9 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,119 North Carolina youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

North Dakota

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, North Dakota would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution North Dakota would receive $1.7 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 144 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, North Dakota would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that North Dakota would receive $1.6 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 1,395 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $117,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 65 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $279,000 less for North Dakota, and 112 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $356,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 213 North Dakota youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Ohio

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Ohio would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Ohio would receive $31.3 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 2,611 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Ohio would receive $12.9 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 455 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Ohio would receive $23.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 19,574 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $4.2 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 2,325 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $4.6 million less for Ohio, and 1,836 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $4.7 million from the President's request, denying training services to 2,801 Ohio youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Oklahoma

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Oklahoma would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Oklahoma would receive $9.9 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 829 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Oklahoma would receive $6.1 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 217 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Oklahoma would receive $8.1 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 16,341 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.0 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 568 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $937,000 less for Oklahoma, and 375 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.0 million from the President's request, denying training services to 570 Oklahoma youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Oregon

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Oregon would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Oregon would receive $7.3 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 606 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Oregon would receive $3.8 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 132 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Oregon would receive $5.3 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 6,502 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.6 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,459 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.5 million less for Oregon, and 580 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.4 million from the President's request, denying training services to 867 Oregon youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution Pennsylvania

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Pennsylvania would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Pennsylvania would receive $28.8 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 2,406 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Pennsylvania would receive $13.7 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 482 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Pennsylvania would receive $27.3 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 28,544 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $5.4 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 3,019 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $4.6 million less for Pennsylvania, and 1,834 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $4.5 million from the President's request, denying training services to 2,696 Pennsylvania youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Rhode Island

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Rhode Island would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Rhode Island would receive $2.7 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 222 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Rhode Island would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Rhode Island would receive $2.0 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 1,386 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $572,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 318 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $279,000 less for Rhode Island, and 112 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $358,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 214 Rhode Island youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

South Carolina

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, South Carolina would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution South Carolina would receive $10.2 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 850 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, South Carolina would receive $6.3 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 223 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that South Carolina would receive $8.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 17,814 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.2 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 674 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.2 million less for South Carolina, and 496 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.7 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,041 South Carolina youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

South Dakota

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, South Dakota would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution South Dakota would receive $2.2 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 181 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, South Dakota would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that South Dakota would receive $1.6 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 1,641 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $146,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 81 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $279,000 less for South Dakota, and 112 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $356,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 213 South Dakota youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Tennessee

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Tennessee would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Tennessee would receive $14.9 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,245 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Tennessee would receive $6.6 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 232 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Tennessee would receive $10.6 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 15,553 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.1 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,166 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $2.4 million less for Tennessee, and 970 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $2.4 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,426 Tennessee youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Texas

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Texas would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Texas would receive $58.8 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 4,910 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Texas would receive $41.4 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 1,459 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Texas would receive $58.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 149,809 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $11.1 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 6,179 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $9.4 million less for Texas, and 3,765 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $9.9 million from the President's request, denying training services to 5,906 Texas youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Utah

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Utah would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Utah would receive $4.3 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 363 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Utah would receive $2.6 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 93 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Utah would receive $2.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 3,465 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $0.5 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 267 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $279,000 less for Utah, and 112 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $356,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 213 Utah youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Vermont

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Vermont would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Vermont would receive $1.6 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 133 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Vermont would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Vermont would receive $1.5 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 1,077 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $206,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 115 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $279,000 less for Vermont, and 112 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $356,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 213 Vermont youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Virginia

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Virginia would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Virginia would receive $12.4 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,034 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Virginia would receive $7.3 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 257 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Virginia would receive $9.8 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 8,423 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.1 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,146 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.6 million less for Virginia, and 645 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.9 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,153 Virginia youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Washington

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Washington would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Washington would receive $12.4 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 1,037 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Washington would receive $6.4 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 227 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Washington would receive $8.3 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 11,464 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.1 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,148 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $2.0 million less for Washington, and 797 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $2.5 million from the President's request, denying training services to 1,524 Washington youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

West Virginia

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, West Virginia would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution West Virginia would receive $6.4 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 531 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, West Virginia would receive $2.8 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 98 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that West Virginia would receive $6.0 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 5,485 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $2.4 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 1,328 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.2 million less for West Virginia, and 467 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.2 million from the President's request, denying training services to 703 West Virginia youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Wisconsin

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Wisconsin would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Wisconsin would receive $11.5 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 964 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Wisconsin would receive $6.6 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 233 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Wisconsin would receive $10.3 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 11,723 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $1.5 million less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 821 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $1.0 million less for Wisconsin, and 387 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $1.0 million from the President's request, denying training services to 624 Wisconsin youth.

Cuts to Key Education and Job Training Initiatives Under the Republican Budget Resolution

Wyoming

April 2000

The Senate Budget Resolution would take the nation down the wrong path by making room for a risky tax cut and failing to extend the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, taking us off the path to paying down the debt by 2013 and threatening to slash key priorities like education, law enforcement, and the environment. If the funding levels proposed by the Senate budget resolution were passed into law, Wyoming would lose funding for several key education and training initiatives, including:

- Head Start & Early Start: President Clinton has proposed the largest increase for Head Start ever and puts the program on track of serving one million children nationwide. In addition to expanding the program to serve more children, the President's budget includes substantial funding for quality improvements. Under the Republican Budget Resolution Wyoming would receive $1.3 million less in Head Start funding than the President's proposal, meaning 105 fewer children would benefit from Head Start's early learning services.
- Class Size Reduction Initiative: The President's Class Size Reduction Initiative will keep the nation on a path to hiring 100,000 high quality teachers nationwide by 2005. Under the Republican budget resolution, Wyoming would receive $2.0 million less for Class Size Reduction Initiative than under President Clinton's proposal, resulting in up to 70 fewer teachers being hired.
- Title I-Aid to Disadvantaged Students: Title I helps high-poverty schools meet important educational needs. Recent studies have shown that minority students have made substantial gains in science, math and reading in part because of Title I. The Republican Senate budget resolution would mean that Wyoming would receive $1.4 million less under Title I than it would under the President's proposal, meaning 1,094 fewer students would benefit from Title I funding.
- Job Training for Dislocated Workers. State-operated programs receive this funding to provide training and support to help permanently separated workers return to productive, unsubsidized employment. The Republican budget resolution provides $179,000 less for this program than President Clinton's budget, meaning 99 fewer people would be able to participate in job training programs and receive job search assistance.
- Adult Employment and Training Activities. The Adult Employment and Training program provides core, intensive, and training services through One-Stop job centers. The budget resolution would mean $279,000 less for Wyoming, and 112 fewer workers could take advantage of these services.
- Summer Jobs and Year-Round Youth Activities. This federal funding helps local officials design and provide education and training programs appropriate for youth in their area. These programs include tutoring, mentoring, education, alternative schools, summer employment, leadership development and support services. The budget resolution would cut $356,000 from the President's request, denying training services to 213 Wyoming youth.